About the theme of "assonance"

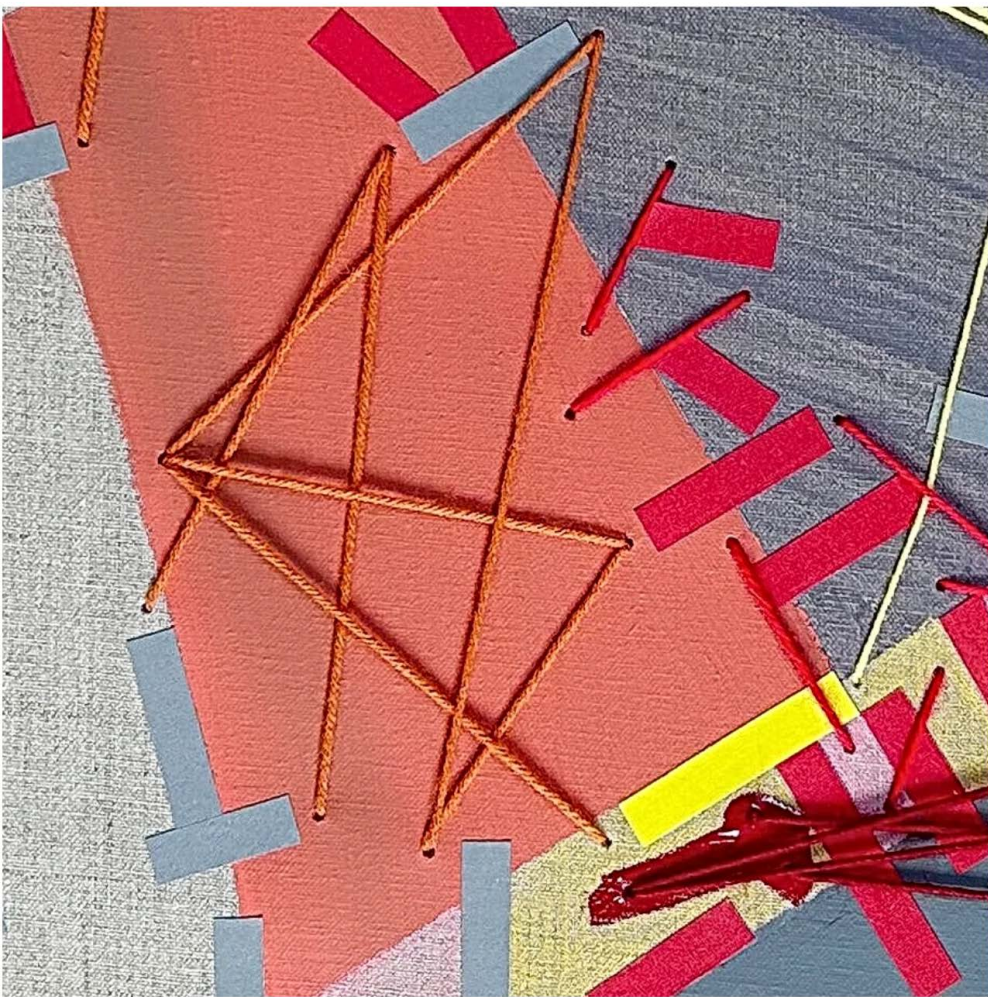

The decline of the city grid refers to a phenomenon where the traditional urban street grid pattern, is characterized by a regular, interconnected network of streets and blocks, has been altered or fragmented over time.

This can occur due to various factors such as urbanization, suburbanization, car-oriented development, zoning regulations, or changes in land use patterns.

One of the main consequences is the loss of walkability and pedestrian friendliness.

Moreover, it can negatively impact social interactions and community cohesion.

The traditional street grid pattern has fostered social interactions and a sense of place, providing multiple routes and public spaces for people to gather and engage with each other.

When this pattern is disrupted, it can result in a less vibrant and less connected urban environment.

I painted this impact through this series using yarn as a symbol of missing connections.
